Education is not a filling a bucket but lighting a fire

Looking back to the history of education we can understand that the attitude towards children has changed quite a lot throughout the thousands of years of humanity. Babies, toddlers, teenagers and young adults were considered to contain a sin, ~~to be in need of constant punishment~~ they were given away to other families or even just left alone.

One of the ideas is that children are a kind of empty paper sheet that needs to be filled or something like stone or plaster that is going to become a wonderful sculpture with the help of parents and educators. This particular thought is reminding me of a "filling a bucket" mentioned by W.B. Yeats. It seems to be very true to life to me as only the adults can teach a child, share their working knowledge and experience or float their baby's boat. - wrong use

At first, it is all to the parents but later come the teachers. They do great work educating a child and as soon as the bucket is filled, when the necessary knowledge is ~~taught~~ given, here comes the time to cotton on to something. From that moment a child or just a student can do anything. In my opinion, only an educated person can achieve something, can have his or her big time.

I believe that ^{teachers} ~~do~~ ~~to~~ can do both. They fill a bucket and they also light a fire in every of their students. ~~to~~ Educators do not actually have to come down on one side of the fence or the other ⁺ because one of them is the continuation of the other one. Yes, some teachers only do the necessary and simply fill that bucket. But those ~~to~~ teachers not the real actual ones. word choice

As for me, a teacher is the one who lights the fire in his or her students. They motivate, they help, they share the knowledge, they notice and help to develop an inner gift for something or a hidden talent. They teach. But a teacher is a mentor who can develop this grim determination in a student. And ~~this~~ that is the way they achieve the actual goal of the educational process setting that spark in the eyes of a child, making him or her believe in ~~oneself~~ themselves and open the door to our big world full of interesting things and new beginnings.

To sum it all up, I am sure that the educators are not only the ones who teach, but ^{in their students} also the ones who ^{can} develop interest in any subject and sphere and help a person find their destiny and make ~~it~~ ~~to~~ their dreams come true.
