Глобальное использование знаний

Nowadays the importance of education can't be overestimated. As a proof to this statement it is possible and necessary, in my opinion, to mention the quote of William Butler Yeats. "Education is not a filling bucket but lighting a fire". Indeed, acquiring new knowledge widens the horizons of person's mind. Let me give some arguments for this point of view.

Firstly, studying is bound to teach students some basic things about the world organisation and laws. It does not matter if we are talking about studying philology or physics, anyway a person who learns something new continuously, during his whole life will understand fundamental principles of logic and critical thinking. This may help while dealing with other people through understanding their points of view, coming down on one side of the fence or the other.

Secondly, if we imagine "lighting a fire" in a metaphorical way, it can be said that education has an incredible effect on person's soul. People, who are loyal to their sphere of education and studies, tend to be more sensible and have deep inner organisation.

Thirdly, a person, who has grim determination for acquiring working knowledge, is more competitive in terms of finding a job. He will not miss his time. He is able to float his boat in the rocky mountain rivers of life, saving himself from poverty and, thus, depression, luckily to find a well-paid job.

In conclusion, education is not just "filling a bucket" but an investment in person's future. It does not matter what exact fire, inner, social or career, it lights.
